Centre for Teaching and Learning Services

Our goal at the Centre for Teaching and Learning Services is to start conversations with faculty members and graduate students about what makes good teaching and learning. Through our workshops, consultations, and lecture series we are building a community of educators at Concordia who reflect on their teaching practice and share their insights with others.

The door at our Loyola campus office is always open so drop by anytime to consult our teaching library or meet with a teaching consultant. Together, we can achieve teaching excellence at Concordia.

Graduate Seminar in University Teaching

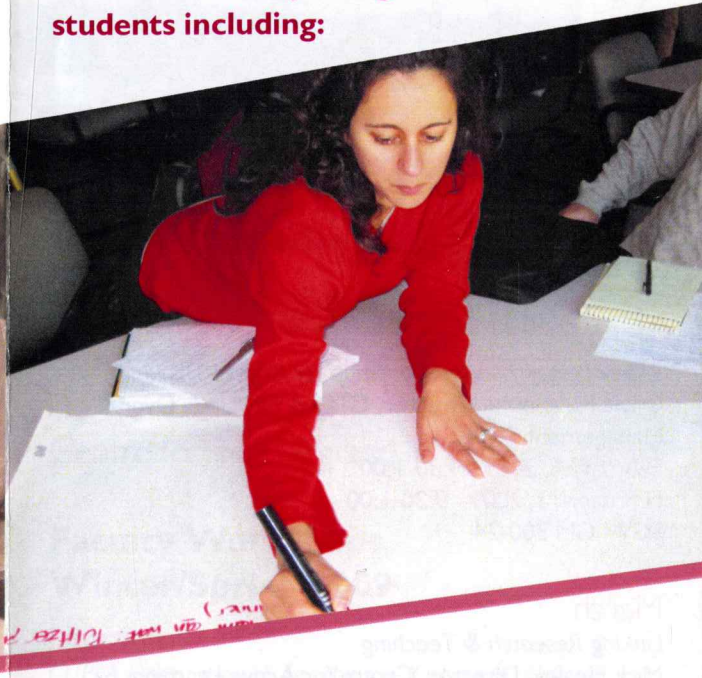

Preparing graduate students for a career in college and university teaching.

As part of our Seminar in University Teaching our goal is to help you learn how to:

- examine various approaches to teaching and current issues in higher education
- plan two mini lessons and practice different teaching strategies in a supportive environment, and benefit from peer feedback and self-evaluation
- develop a syllabus for a course that you would like to teach in the future based on a principled approach to course design
- articulate your own teaching philosophy statement as a first step towards developing a teaching dossier

The Centre offers a range of individual consultations and support services to Concordia faculty and graduate students including:

- Technology support
- Classroom observation and feedback
- Course evaluation interpretation
- Mid-course feedback
- Course design
- Preparing teaching dossiers
- Strategies for teaching large classes
- Inclusive teaching for student retention
- Lesson planning and grading rubrics
- Active learning techniques
- Custom design workshops for departments
- Sustainability and community-based projects

If you would like to boost your knowledge of teaching or want to find out more about our services contact the CTLS or visit our website. <http://teaching.concordia.ca>
